Communications, Business, Education Attract Increasing Numbers of Students

by Charles Bogle
News Staff Reporter

Although the number of students enrolled in any particular major fluctuates from year to year, the past ten years have indicated certain basic trends among Loyola students. Among those trends has been the gradual growth of the Business School and the growth of the Communications and Education departments in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Enrollment in the Sellinger School of Business has steadily increased over the past ten years, while enrollment in Accounting, traditionally Loyola's most popular major, has declined somewhat. In 1977, students in business-related majors accounted for one-third of all Loyola students, while in 1987 they represented almost half of the student population. At the same time, however, the number of Accounting majors as a percentage of the student population has declined by nearly half over the same period.

Part of the problem is an increased competition for student among the different departments in the Business School," said E. Barry Rice, Assistant Professor of Accounting. "We have fewer seniors this year than in past years, but the numbers tend to fluctuate, and we expect the numbers to rise again in the next several years."

Rice expressed confidence that Accounting would continue to be one of Loyola's most popular majors. "Accounting has been hot for the past twenty years, and there will always be room for top-flight graduates," he said.

In the College of Arts and Sciences, the traditionally popular majors have been Biology, Psychology, and English. In 1987, students in these three areas represented almost 40 percent of student in the CAS. In recent years, however, the Communications and Education departments have been attracting more students than ever before.

"The Writing/Media department didn't even exist as a separate entity until the 1983-84 academic year," said Barbara Mallonee, acting chairman of the Writing/Media department. "Originally, the communications side of the department was supposed to be a small project, but in 1983 Andrew Cisfalo joined the department with a lot of energy and the idea that all aspects of communication included a heavy emphasis on the creation of written work."

"We have a fairly unique program, in that we are one of the few schools to combine writing with all aspects of communications," said Andrew Cisfalo, Associate Professor of Writing and Media. "For the past two years, we've offered a full Communications major, with concentrations in various fields," he said.

The Education department has also experienced growth in recent years, primarily due to a shift in the public perception of teaching.

"Education as a profession has received a lot of good press lately, and salaries have been increasing steadily," said William J. Autoriell, chairman of the Education department. Autoriell said that those two factors played a key role in the growth of Loyola's own department. "We've been doubling up sections of certain classes, and the number of freshmen who enter as declared Education majors has risen dramatically this year," he said.

At least part of the appeal of any field of study has to do with the availability of jobs in that field, and Accounting and Communications are alike in that respect.

"We are generally perceived by CPA firms as having the best accounting program in the Baltimore-Washington area," said Rice. "And this is reflected in the number of firms and agencies that pursue our graduates. Many of our students have multiple job offers, and in 1986, 99 out of 100 of our graduates were employed or in graduate school."

The growth of available jobs in the Communications field has more to do with the restructuring of the job market as a whole, according to Cisfalo.

"There's been a new interest in people coming out of a liberal arts background with effective communications skills," said Cisfalo. "Many of our graduates go into management training programs or personnel work, and we've also had a lot of success at getting people into graduate schools."

Rice's thoughts were echoed by Carolyn Kues, Associate Director of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

"There are many opportunities for liberal arts students with good communication skills in the business world," said Kues. She said that due to the flexible, service-oriented nature of the future's job market, students should develop "transferable skills," skills that could be applied in various fields. "It may be easier to get a job when you have a single, marketable skill, but students should strive to be flexible. There's no better preparation for that than a broad education," she said.

Story Company Promotes Literary Interests

by Maria B. Trintis
Assistant Features Editor

Loyola student and current city reporter for The Baltimore Sun, Rafael Alvarez, awarded Loyola sophomore, Ed Ashton, second place in The Story Company's "399 Short Story Contest."

Alvarez stated that the purpose of the six-month old Story Company is "to discover new talent, promote original fiction, and make money doing it."

Alvarez and his partner, Tyrone Crawley, judged Ashton from amongst 200 entries as winner of a $50 savings bond, a public reading of his work, two tickets to a Bullets game, and a free Culissus pizza for his short story, "Incident on West Cherry Lane." The story is about a man whose best friend has just been stabbed and Ashton's intent is to show the thrill that society receives from witnessing others suffer.

"We refuse to believe that society no longer reads and writes. We are out to prove it by making money—the only thing this country understands," said Alvarez.

The contest provided the company with a working capital from the $2 entry fee, as well as a mailing list predisposed to readers and writers and an enormous amount of publicity. "I was not satisfied with doing it in a traditional manner. We're not satisfied in doing anything in a traditional manner," said Alvarez.

Alvarez is not satisfied with anything except the best and this stems from his college days when he had Dr. Thomas Scheye as his journalism instructor. "My college mentor and a prince among men made this blanket statement to our class 'Anyone who sells a story to The Baltimore Sun over summer vacation gets an automatic A regardless of how well they did in the class,' said Alvarez. Scheye promised to change their grade in the fall of the next academic year.

Alvarez naively thought his writing was not good enough for The Sun, so he decided that if he got an interview with a "big enough fish" the fish would sell the story regardless of his writing ability. Thus, he and his friend drove to Chicago to (visit his Aunt Dolores, (see the Rolling Stones tour, and (try an interview with Studs Terkell, Pulitzer Prize winner for his non-fiction stories.

According to Alvarez, anger and desire for revenge are surprisingly missing in the torture victims he has treated. He said many victims see their torturers as victims of a dehumanizing system, and they wish they could help the torturer escape from this situation.

Solomon urged students to work for the abolition of torture everywhere. He said many victims see their torturers as victims of a dehumanizing system, and they wish they could help the torturer escape from this situation.

Simultaneously, he took his City Paper clippings, cut his hair, got a suit, and walked into The Baltimore Sun Personnel Office and said, "If I'm going to be a clerk for The Sun, I at least ought to be one in the newsroom."

Within a week, Features printed the article on Terkell on the first page of the section and Alvarez was hired as a full-time editorial assistant in the Sports Department at the age of 20.

"Dr. Scheye, the great man that he is, has never changed my B to a A-plus proposition," said the 1981 Loyola graduate. Yet, Alvarez has been working with The Sun ever since.

Alvarez took the idea for The Story Company from his brother Danny who wanted to sell a Spanish sausage recipe through a mail order business. "While his effort failed, it inspired me to finally take a chance on a festering desire to become a small business man," he said. "The question was 'what could I sell?'

A new and original method for marketing fiction will be unveiled at the Victory Festival for the winning stories on May 22nd at The Chambers, 203 Davis Street. This is "Fab Fiction's" hit parade of the top 20 original stories, which is the second project of the company.

According to Alvarez, the public will be able to order stories that appeal to them based on a title and a genre. The reader will then receive the story of the author in an attractive booklet form which includes illustrations, a photo of the author, a quote from the author on why they write, and two bonus stories free of charge.

"Our intent is to sell fiction like Conway Island board games," said Alvarez.

"There is also an altruistic angle to The Story Company, for they are committed to promoting literacy. Alvarez and Crawley, who met in 1979 during their high school years working for the Social Security Administration, were the kind of kids who had as much fun, sometimes more, in the library as they did on the basketball court, according to Alvarez.

"There's a thrill to entering other worlds through language that should be available to everyone," said Alvarez. "Think of me as Jerry Lewis and illiteracy as muscular dystrophy."

According to Alvarez, The Story Company donates a percentage of their profits to groups working with volunteer services for the illiterate. They encourage by means of flyers, literate citizens to share their good fortune with others. "Promoting people who are teaching others to read will always be our primary charitable affiliation," said Alvarez.

Future Lawyers Get Professional Advice

by Cate Gillen

Attorney Joseph Touhey spoke about trial lawyers competency, and pre-law advisor Dr. Carol Abromaitis honored Loyola seniors who have been accepted to law schools at Loyola's eighth annual Law Day celebration on Friday, April 27.

Touhey, a Loyola alumnus active in the public and private spheres of trial law, was the keynote speaker. He spoke about the increasing lack of competency among trial lawyers and the need to formulate programs to battle this incompetency. Judges Raymond G. Thieme, Jr., and Robert J. Gerstung responded to Touhey's address.

According to Touhey, there are approximately 17,101 practicing attorneys in Maryland, "the vast majority of whom are not competent."

Touhey suggested that a compulsory re-certification program focusing on continued education in the legal field in order secure re-licensure, would be one way of battling incompetent advocacy.

He also encouraged the establishment of a mandatory certification program that would give lawyers intensive courtroom experience before they could litigate cases on their own in order to train lawyers to be good advocates.

Touhey also suggested that peer review boards and certification boards would be effective tools in diminishing incompetency in the system. He said the peer review boards would set a standard of competency within the practice of law, which is not competent."

He said that the legal profession has no method other than disciplinary measures of dealing with incompetent trial lawyers. Touhey said that, unlike doctors and accountants, lawyers do not have to face a committee that gauges their performances. He said there is a "big gap between licensure and trouble."

Discrimination Bill Will Not Affect Loyola's Policies

by Mary Beth McLooghan
News Staff Reporter

A bill concerning discrimination against women and minorities on college campuses has passed the Senate, according to a formal CPS article.

The bill, The Civil Rights Restoration Act, aims to overturn the U.S. Supreme Court's 1984 Oncale decision which limited government measures for pressuring colleges into ending discrimination.

According to Loyola College officials, this decision will have little effect on Loyola's present policies on faculty hiring and salary, financial aid, admissions, or sports spending.

The Oncale decision arose from a lawsuit filed by officials at Pennsylvania's Grove City College, who asserted Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 was unconstitutional because it forbids receipt of federal funds from discriminating on the basis of gender.

Until 1984, the U.S. Department of Education, which is charged with enforcing Title IX, officially interpreted it to mean that if an single program or student on a campus received federal funds, all the college's programs had to prove that they were not discriminatory.

Lawyers for Grove City College convinced the Supreme Court to rule that only the specific office that directly received the federal money had to comply with Title IX.

According to Kathleen Donofrio, Loyola's Director of Personnel, Loyola has no specific program for the hiring of minorities and women, but if there were equally qualified candidates, and a women or minority member had never held the position, the minority candidate would probably receive the position.

She said, "There are two schools of thought about minority hiring. One is the belief that certain jobs should be advertised as jobs for minorities only. But this creates bad feelings on both sides. The minorities get the sense that they are 'tokens' and non-minorities are eliminated from that position. We think the second school of thought, which is the policy we follow, is much more productive all around."

According to a recent article published in Academe magazine, the average salary by rank between men and women at Loyola is as follows: Male associate professor receive on the average $37,000 and their female counterparts receive on the average $28,100. Male assistant professors make on the average $29,000 while their female counterparts make on the average $27,100.

According to the same article, the number of full time male professors is 30 compared to 24 women. The number of full time associate male professors is 58 compared to 6 women. The number of full time assistant male professors is 49 compared to 28 women.

The admissions office does not have a specific policy for the admittance of women. A March 17th inter-office memo contends that there is no present need for such a policy. The breakdown of most campuses the only offices that receive federal funds are financial aid, library, physical plant, and research departments.

the people accepted in 1986 was 834 females to 565 males. The breakdown for 1987 was 1091 females to 747 males.

Mark Lindenmeyer, Loyola's director of Financial Aid, said that in 1987, 393 females and 234 males were awarded academic scholarships.

According to Ann McClosky, Director of Women's Sports, "It's easy to be misled by numbers" when looking at the male-female ratio of distribution of athletic scholarships. "A lot of times it depends on how the coach wants to distribute the scholarship money allocated to his or her sport," she said.

McClosky said male athletes receive more scholarships than do women, but she said this is due to an administration level decision to invest more in sports that produce revenue.

On most campuses the only offices that receive federal funds are financial aid, library, physical plant, and research departments.

Poll Shows Students Divided

compiled by Michelle Tracy
Assistant News Editor

According to a recent poll, neither George Bush nor Michael Dukakis has a clear edge among Loyola students.

In a poll of 169 Loyola undergraduates, 44.4 percent supported Bush, 39.1 percent supported Dukakis, and 16.1 percent were undecided or gave no answer. The poll has a margin of error of 3.7 percent, so these results are not sufficient to say Bush has the lead.

However, Bush was the clear leader over Jackson. Of those polled, 73.7 percent said they would vote for Bush over Jackson, with only 12.4 percent supporting Jackson and the remaining 11.8 percent undecided.

Those who were registered tended to chose along party lines in the Dukakis-Bush contest, with 66.7 percent of Democrats supporting Dukakis and 67.4 percent of Republicans supporting Bush. However, in the case of a Jackson-Bush contest, many Democrats switched to Bush. In fact, 61.5 percent of Democrats and 91.3 percent of Republicans supported Bush over Jackson.

The poll showed that Bush tended to be more popular among males, 51.7 percent of whom supported him as opposed to only 38.6 percent of the females. Among females, 54.1 percent of the females, but only 33.8 percent of the males, supported him.

Business majors were the heaviest supporters of Bush, while Humanities majors tended to support Dukakis. According to the poll, 59.7 percent of Business majors supported Bush, as opposed to only 29.7 percent of Humanities majors. On the other hand, 58.4 percent of the Humanities majors supported Dukakis, but only 38.8 percent of business majors supported him.

Dukakis also earned more support than did Bush among Natural Science majors. Dukakis was supported by 45 percent of Natural Science majors, while Bush was supported by only 30 percent of them. Social Science majors were almost evenly split between the two, with about 40 percent supporting each candidate.

When asked what they thought the single most important issue was in this presidential campaign, 18.9 percent said the deficit or the economy, 13 percent said nuclear arms or Soviet/U.S. relations, and 10.4 percent said foreign policy. Of the remaining respondents, 16.6 percent gave various other answers and 40.8 percent said they did not know.

This poll had a 79 percent response rate. The higher the response rate, the more reliable the results are. This means that 78 percent of the people who were determined to be eligible participated. The remaining 22 percent either refused to participate or were not available to participate. Calls which were not answered, were busy, or were disconnected were not included in the calculation of the response rate.

Proposal Gives Opportunities to Students

Dr. Charles Mergenthaler, Dean of the Sellinger School of Business Administration.

by Shawn Biglin
Associate Business Editor

After the proposal for a student run business consisting of the sale of computers to the students and faculty was rejected as being too complicated, another opportunity appears to have some potential. Mr. Andrew Ciolfi, Professor of Communications I approached Dean Mergenthaler in the hopes of finding some business students to help with the "business" side of the newspaper. The Green & Grey is about a $40,000 a year business that operates independently, meaning they are responsible for their own finances.

In the fall, the dean of the business school began to search for a feasible business venture that a group of students could run. The students would comprise the Board of Directors with some faculty overseers. Their initial search found a business now run by ACS, which entailed the sale of about $85,000 worth of computers and peripherals. But after some research, a proposal was prepared by Dr. Lauretta Poulos Simmons that concluded this business would not satisfy the dean's requirements. The sales are now done by one student and Simmons discovered that the job requires a lot of work and much knowledge about the different types of equipment. This job requires a hefty commitment from a student and without the proper compensation (i.e. credits, tuition remission, salary...) it would be impossible to fill. The dean was trying to find a business that a group of students could participate in which would provide opportunities for all of the different business majors.

Although the plan for students to participate in the business operations of the paper is in its early proposal phase, Mr. Ciolfi and both Mergenthaler and Assistant Dean Jordan maintain that there is some potential here. The current structure of the Green & Grey consists of a Business Manager and an Advertising Director who handle the logistics of the paper. Both of these people spend between 20-30 hours a week working on the paper, and although the position is volunteer, both directors feel the experience was invaluable.

The current business manager, Senior Accounting Major Roger Young, felt that his year term has provided him with good business experience. But he stressed that due to the nature of the paper the business manager makes his own job, so the final product is as good as he makes it. This person is responsible for a large amount of tasks and if he doesn't perform, the paper doesn't get published, so the position is critical. He not only oversees the accounting functions but also is responsible for the long-term planning of the paper.

The advertising director is responsible for selling, laying out and accounting for all of the advertisements in the paper. Not only does this person need to be very organized to handle all of the paperwork, they also need good communication skills since there is much contact with the customers.

If the plan is approved, students from the business school would be used to help the business manager and advertising director with some of their many chores. One of the paper's top priorities is to build an advertising sales force who would help the current staff of three people. This type of experience could be very valuable to an advertising or marketing major. Another goal of the paper is to eventually computerize the accounting and advertising information, which could be completed by the DPMA. And lastly, the FMA's financial knowledge could be helpful in the long-range planning.

Professors Join MIS Staff

by Shawn Biglin
Associate Business Editor

The search for new qualified MIS professors has finally ended. Loyola, who has pursued Ph.D. level professors for some time, has received word that two highly qualified teachers will be here in the fall. These two professors were heavily recruited by other schools around the nation but both felt there was a true match between themselves and Loyola.

The first, Dr. Michael DeHaemer, is currently the Chairman of Naval Science at Rensselaer Polytech Institute (RPI) and brings to Loyola 28 years of management experience in military, academic and industrial environments. He received his Ph.D. in MIS from RPI and at one point in his career he commanded a ballistic missile submarine for the Navy.

Among his many published works, his most recent, "Effect of Computer Synthesized Voice on User Performance in Decision Support Systems" appeared in the MIS Quarterly in February 1988. In his first year at Loyola, DeHaemer is scheduled to teach mostly in the MBA program with only one section of undergraduate Production Management. When asked why he chose Loyola, DeHaemer simply said "that it was a school on the rise and there was true progress being made here." He also sees a compatibility in his interests and the rest of the faculty. His interest in Decision Support Systems and also the human interface with Artificial Intelligence are two topics that the MIS department maintains to be very important.

In the process of receiving her Ph.D. in MIS, Ms. Ellen Hoadley looks forward to returning to her hometown. Hoadley chose Loyola because "although I had several opportunities available with the many schools where I interviewed, I was looking for an institution that valued teaching and education but also supported research endeavors, which is hard to find."

Currently, Hoadley is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Indiana majoring in MIS. Her research interests include: computer graphics, system development methodologies, prototyping and the management of the IS function. In the fall Hoadley will be teaching both undergraduate and graduate MIS.

Two Win DPMA Contest

by Stacey Donovan
Associate Business Editor

Two Loyola students won awards in the Baltimore Data Processing Management Association (DPMA) Essay Contest last week. The contest was open to approximately 75 junior members of the Baltimore Chapter. The essays were judged by Senior members of the DPMA, who are business professionals in the community.

Nicole Maher, a junior MIS major, topped the field of applicants, winning $200. Second place, and $100, was awarded to Patricia Bloma, a senior MIS major. Out of four possible topics, both students decided to write about the same subject: What are the technical policy and legal issues raised by a global integrated systems digital network.

According to Dr. John Burbridge, head of Loyola's MIS department, "the only restriction was that papers didn't exceed 10 double-spaced pages." Students had a month to complete their essays; the deadline was April 15. The 75 junior members of the Baltimore DPMA attend Loyola College, Villanova, UMBC, Morgan State, University of Baltimore, and Salisbury State.

"I was really surprised to find out I won," said Nicole Maher. She added that her essay started out as a class assignment. Bloma said she was informed about the contest through a letter from Dr. Burbridge.

"I covered the same topic last semester in telecommunications," added Bloma.

A dinner for the recipients was held April 21 at the Hunt Valley Marriott.

Business Speaker Addresses Lambda Alpha Chi

by Stacey Donovan
Associate Business Editor

Controller, Geoffrey L. Hess, of Annapolis Federal Savings Bank, spoke before Loyola's Lambda Alpha Chi Chapter Thursday night in McManus Theater. Hess said that "The accounting profession is undergoing a lot of changes." His topic focused on Managerial Accounting.

Hess also discussed the "expectation gap." According to him the "expectation gap" is "something you're expecting but not receiving."

Hess explained that the "expectation gap" operates not only in the public sector but private as well. He added that "it creates an analytical process of thinking." In continuing this line of thought, Hess stressed, "It is important to develop analytical and organizational skills."

In his address, Hess referred to the nine new standards in auditing which will be completely implemented in May of 1989. These new standards include increased responsibility for fraud and illegal acts; new auditors responsibility to detect and report irregularities; and improve external communications. Hess

Farewell Loyola, Hello Dukakis

I have been writing this column all year and either to your relief or dismay, this is the last one. Those of you that have followed my writing have either agreed or disagreed with the views I have presented. If it sparked interest in politics, brought out points you never thought of, or provided a different version you did not agree with, then it worked.

Since this is my farewell, I figured I'd give some predictions for the upcoming election. In November, I think it's quite obvious that Vice President George Bush will be running against Governor Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts for the presidency.

Unless Bush can shed the Iran-Contra scandal plaguing him, I don't think this country will cast a favorable vote for him. Ronald Reagan is popular, but Bush doesn't have the charisma or credibility that our current president has portrayed.

Everyone is claiming that these two candidates are so boring that the voter turnout will be light come November. Yet we are sure to see a heated and tight race for the presidency, something which has not been offered in the last two contests.

As crazy as many of you think I am, I have to predict a Dukakis victory in November. This is not because this country is really behind him, but because he is a guy that really doesn't bother anyone. I think this election will be won because people are going to vote against Bush rather than for Dukakis.

Now this isn't to say that Dukakis has an easy road to the White House. His campaign needs to win in the South and on the West Coast to be a threat. But with Dukakis' strong command of the Hispanic language and reports that he is leaning with southern conservatives as his running mate, I think he'll pull ahead of Bush.

Whoever the next president is, he'll have one large task ahead of him once he takes over. The new president may very well serve only one term, because what the present administration has ignored, the next administration will have to clean up. The next four years are certain to be clouded with recessions and deflating as well as increased taxes.

The Iran-Contra mess needs to be put behind us, but the democrats are sure to use it and the Ed Meese disaster as issues in their campaign. The summer conventions and fall campaigning will be extremely interesting, but look for the democrats to pull ahead and win.

That's the way I see it. I'm sure there are a lot of you who disagree with me, but since I won't be back next year, it looks like I have the last word this time. But if I am wrong, you have this column to throw in my face, so we'll see.

Looking back on my career with the Green & Grey, I must say it is sad to be leaving the staff. I joined the paper in my junior year and I was fortunate enough to be the news editor last year. This job helped me to understand the way the college works and also how to interview the administration, faculty and students of Loyola. Things weren't always pretty, but the late night deadlines, page layouts, copy editing, learning how to typeset, and dealing with the verbal and physical threats from students and administrators has all been an added part of my education that has already helped me in the 'real world.' The Green & Grey has offered so many of us great friendships and newspaper skills, and for that I thank it.

As for all the individuals I have worked with such as fellow editors, managing editors, the one and only editor-in-chief and three incredible assistant news editors, I thank you. Administrators and faculty have taught me how to get around unanswered questions and situations that I will deal with for the rest of my life as a reporter. There are a few others, both present and past members of the staff, that have been instrumental, enlightening and comedic at all the right times. I can't go public with thanks to you; the list is long and you know who you are.

I extend my best wishes to the new editor-in-chief, the managing editor and staff. Things can only get better for you. You have the enthusiasm and drive to fuel this paper. Don't ever get down on yourselves. Next year, and in the years to come, the Green & Grey will continue taking the steps toward becoming one of the finest college papers in the country. Never back down from what you believe in, always give reasons for what you report, and never, I mean never, be wrong. I've been telling this school for two years that we only report the news, we never make it.

As for me, I'm going to continue with coverage and commentary of the political scene. I'll be studying public affairs reporting through a graduate program in the state capitol of Illinois. Is it possible to get a subscription out there? I hope so, I'd like to stick with the publication that got me started in a journalism career.

I know it's cliché, but it's appropriate; so long, farewell, amen.

Help an Abandoned Dog

Last week a small dog was abandoned in my neighborhood. Most of the neighbors have dogs and they came together to feed and house the pup. Unfortunately, none of the families can take the little dog (my two rather large dogs rejected it — rather forcefully).

The pup, male, is apparently something of a small poodle. It is expressive, loving (fell asleep in my wife's lap), and very, very lonely. It spent one evening crying before we took it in. I hate to attribute human traits to an animal, but were it a child the same action would have led to the same response.

The problem is this: we will have to take Benji to the SPCA if we can't find a home. If you have a desire for a dog, this one is a winner. There is more love in this dog than most of us have experienced and more need for a home. We can't keep it, can't abandon it, and prefer not to have it put down.

Having dogs has associated expenses. I will pay to have the dog spayed, checked by the vet, and for all shots. Additionally, I will provide $100 to offset the costs of food, water, dish, and leash. Alternatively, I have a hell of a nice Apple IIe with software and monitor — this is really a nice starter computer and perfect for the young learner — the computer and the dog would be a delightful addition to the family abode.

If you can provide a home, I will most happily assist you. I can't keep the animal and I can't bear the thought of putting it down. If you have room, some time and affection, do give me a call at Loyola or at home.

Pledge Money For Benches?

Well, the school year is almost over, and that means — time to hit the seniors up for money! I, like all Loyola seniors, received a letter asking for a $35 donation. My first thought was, 'I'm not going to pledge one penny to this school,' considering that, in the four years I've been here, Loyola has messed up commuter parking, told off-campus residents where they cannot live, and told me to move out of Wynnewood's West tower approximately a month and a half before it would have been condemned.

But, as I read the letter, I reached the part that said our contributions will help future students. I must admit this is a good point. However, the letter went on to say that our contributions would go towards (wait for it) — BENCHES on the new Charleston — Donnelly walkway! They'll even say 'Class of '88' on them! How these benches will benefit students, I have no idea. The bridge won't be long that students will have to stop and rest, and on one could study or talk on them with the nose from Charlie Sheen directly below! In my opinion, any money would be better spent if I contributed it to a particular club or department.

At the completion of its second year with a new name, a new staff, and a new overall look, the Green & Grey is excited to announce yet another improvement. The Green & Grey's long awaited acceptance into the Writing/Media Department as the departmental newspaper has finally been achieved. A proposal outlining the Green & Grey's plan for operating as a student-run newspaper has been drawn up and approved of by the Editor-in-Chief of the newspaper, the Advisor to the newspaper, the Chairman of the Writing/Media Department, and the Writing/Media Department as a whole.

Under this new set-up the newspaper will have access to the incoming media lab, and the use of students who will write for the paper as a part of their class grade in addition to the volunteers the paper now utilizes.

The move aligning the Green & Grey editorially and financially with the guidance of the Writing/Media Department will provide the cornerstone for the building of the strongest voice the students of Loyola College may have ever had.

The new Green & Grey staff for 1988-89 is looking forward to launching from their undefined existence as an independent body to their being a part of a journalistic department that will provide the newspaper with the necessary equipment, advice, and surplus staff, that could make the Green & Grey one of the strongest college newspapers in the country.

Excuse me, is this America? Is this an American college campus? Is this an open forum?

Forget the belligerent tone, but please let me explain.

There was an ROTC President's Review on Curley Field last Thursday (28 April) a military parade and awards ceremony with Mr. Sellinger as guest of honor. We had a reception afterwards, and we invited ~~members~~ faculty members for letters, and students — well, you get it.

Well, let's get back to my original question. This is America, right? We're all entitled to our own opinions and we decide for ourselves what we want to see and what we don't want to see. Furthermore, we let others decide for themselves what they want to see and what they don't want to see. So why, this obstruction of freedom, you who put up the flyers and tore down our signs?

I personally put up a beautiful sign on the Maryland Hall walkway on Monday afternoon — and by Monday evening someone had ripped it down. The Amnesty International (A.I.) sign about a symposium on the effects of torture started up, though. Other

ROTC members put up invitational flyers — which were promptly covered up by flyers about the A.I. symposium. How ironic! So, Loyola College students, you may have missed a great event because someone didn't want you to see it. (How Big Brotherish!)

Well, let's get back to my original question. This is America, right? We're all entitled to our own opinions and we decide for ourselves what we want to see and what we don't want to see. Furthermore, we let others decide for themselves what they want to see and what they don't want to see. So why, this obstruction of freedom, you who put up the flyers and tore down our signs?

I know that these methods were not officially sanctioned by A.I.'s staff, but whoever you were, you certainly weren't helping them out, were you? The whole point of a group like A.I. is the promotion of freedom everywhere, correct? You may not like the U.S. At my being represented on this campus — well, tough. This is America. Millions of U.S. Army members have died so you can have your freedom in this country, whether you'll admit it or not.

Get a grip on reality, or you're just as hypocritical and threatening as those who physically deprive people of their freedom. What do you think we're fighting, anyway?

P.S. You missed a great parade.

Student Government Speaks to the G & G

The Student Government Association is an organization created for the purpose of protection and representation of the student body. It is not controlled or directed by the Administration but rather exists for the students and by the students. We treat every organization in the same manner.

An student organization which receives financial support from the S.G.A. is required to follow the fiscal policies and procedures outlined in the Loyola College Constitution. In exchange for following these policies, the clubs and organizations receive the privilege of utilizing S.G.A. funds, services, equipment, and facilities.

A Clarification About Faculty Evaluations

It is the instructor's right to decline to submit his evaluations to the committee that publishes them, and he does not have to justify his decision should he decline. While it is of course possible that he may choose not to submit his course evaluations because they are poor, he can also refuse for other reasons that are unrelated to the quality of his evaluations. I did not imply that a teacher who knows of the booklet would refuse to allow his evaluations to be printed out, because they are undesirable. Certainly other reasons for declining exist, and no inference can be made about the quality of evaluations simply because they do not appear in the Faculty Evaluations booklet.

I hope that this letter clarifies both the circumstances surrounding an instructor's decision on whether or not to submit his course evaluations for publication and my own statements on the reasons for his refusal should he decide to withhold them from publication.

You may be wondering, as you begin to read this column, what is the purpose of a "Senior Farewell" for members of the G&G staff. As you approach the column of set type, which is run off in 3000 copies, you may be wondering about the experiences of these people. For some of you they may be people with whom you lived, partied, encountered in campus activities, or worked for as a G&G staffer. Or simply, you may have read their by-lines over the years and are looking for information that can't be found on a news page. Some of that opinion may occasionally spring up in this column, but for the most part, it will try to show a side of the student paper that can't be found by passing through the Green & Grey.

When I first applied to Loyola in 1981, there was a plot of ground that had just been broken where the college center now is. Mr. Yanchuk, dean of students, was still here and Mr. Fitzsimmons' office was in Butler Hall. When I actually began attending Loyola in '83 (I stayed out for a year), that was the year The Greyhound, student paper (freshman and sophomores weren't here then) had run a rather controversial cartoon that almost got the paper sued. But then, The Greyhound never was reputed for being editorially responsible that year.

I've heard students say on campus that the G&G is too tame, they never see any "dirt" and they wonder if the paper kissses up to the administration. Well, if you're looking for dirt, you won't ever find it in the G&G. We print what is factual — there's no opinion in the news pages. And as for "kissing up" to the administration, we don't believe in any "amorous" involvements with any one on campus. If a story can't make it on its own into the newspaper, we're not going to prejudice or create facts to get it into print. This is journalistically unethical.

The Green & Grey tries to maintain distance from administrators, SCA officers, or any other group that may cause a conflict of interest in getting the news out. This is not to say that we're being unfriendly — but rather it's a difficult line we have to walk to "get the news straight."

Too frequently on this campus, there is a compromise in direction, goals, and interest. Close associations between students and administrators causes a compromise of interests, and it's always the students that are compromised, not the administration. Giving specifics here would be uncomfortable and I don't care to involve this column in debate. Over the past two years, the student paper has been involved in too much debate.

When I initially joined The Greyhound as its news editor, all I was concerned about was the editorial quality of the paper. But as time progressed, I learned that the student paper was one of the most politically-harassed organizations on campus. It makes sense though, but at the time my naivete blinded me. In a school whose basic method of operation is control, the student paper was under sharp scrutiny. And over time, it was a pie that had fingers throughout the campus stuck in it. The forum for student opinion is too important, or should I say dangerous, a medium to "let loose."

What the administration of Loyola fails to see sometimes is that all these people who work on the G&G want to do is print the paper. They don't want to be harangued by campus conflicts, or harassed by special interest groups. And despite popular belief, we can't print everything that everyone wants us to print. And believe it or not, not everything that people want us to print deserves to be printed. Sorry!

But you see, here is where our problem begins, someone wants a story in or someone doesn't want a story or editorial in and then they want to assert their influence over us, and unless we know how, we don't do it (it's simply not ethical), tensions arise, emotions mount, and control factors start to rise in conversations on committees, councils, boards, and commissions on campus under the guise of protecting the student paper or trying to make it "more responsible." What fun!

These columns of farewell are for us, in part, refection and recognition. And as I look back over the past three years, I ask, is it worth sacrifices in CPA and even personal reputation. Teachers at times send us crossed signals. I can remember comments that said, "If you're going to take the responsibility, then do it right." But the cost of doing it "right" was missing that teacher's class, or some other's or running in an assignment late. It's an unfair situation for both parties. Loyola must do something to justify the problem. We leave to future staffers and administrators.

Over the years, my long-term association with the paper has been explained by my being an ego-maniac, power-hungry, or an obsessive neurotic (I'm not prepared to disagree with the latter). That's strange, because I started out as an introverted reporter who only wanted to see the paper print good stories. But I ended up in a very different situation. And as I ask myself was it worth it — I pause. It's a question I have asked myself every day since I took office as Editor-in-Chief of the G&G (I'll abstain from an answer here).

In writing a farewell editorial, there is a tendency to write things that one never had the opportunity to write before. I'll abstain from that also. Either it won't be believed or it won't be understood because you weren't there. Or you may not even care.

As I take my leave, I would like to thank Andrew Ciofalo who taught me what ethics, journalism, and good judgement is all about. In an office where the editor must be skeptical of everyone and everything, (You were right Mr. C., my skin has become a little thicker), I have been glad to know the man as a constant standard of those qualities which I find honorable.

I also thank Roger Young, long-time compatriot and business manager of the G&G. Rog has worked wonders for the paper. He has given us a professional foundation in the work he has done here. His efforts, dedication and talent deserve nothing less than thanks and admiration.

I would be remiss in my obligations if I did not thank the security staff who put up with us and our insane hours needing to get into the building for production and photography.

Of course thanks go to this years staff, and next year's for letting us out of here, for their hard work, endless hours, and many sacrifices to get the paper out each week.

To the G&G staff and to the community we bid "Fare Well."

It is always hard to reflect on a past experience, such as four years of college, in a short amount of time. Those who know me can tell you I could sit around "reflecting" for about 2-3 days. I only have about 500 words to do this so I had better start. I can look back on my first days at Loyola in Butler Hall and pleasantly say that I had never been happier. The new found freedom of living away from home and the experiences of college life made me feel like I was on my way to a successful future. Little did I realize the many hurdles I would have to jump over in the process.

That first hurdle was Hound Day, 1984! On this day I was forced to consume approximately 1-100 (the exact number escapes me now!) shots of vodka, gin and other intoxicants. On this day I crawled up the hill by Hammerman and Butler on my hands and knees praying to God that I was not going to die, flat on my face, on the hill. I survived, though three days after this I still wished I HAD died.

Now the years seem to have flown by. The experiences of my four years here have been the best of my life. Sure, that may sound like a cliché, but it is the truth. Everyone should make the best of those four years, because once they are gone, they never return.

The best thing I ever did was to become active in the extracurricular activities Loyola had to offer. There is only so much drinking you can do (really?) and then you need to do something else. What did I do? Well, I joined countless Friday nights trying to keep control of the chaos that sometimes developed at a Loyola Multi-Purpose room event. I spent time playing M.G. in Maryland Day, the day 50 Loyola students were almost crushed by a hot-air balloon.

Then there was the job that everyone wanted (right!). This was my job as a server in the SACA cafeteria line. I caught more grief from that job! It was quite an experience, to say the least.

Now I'm sure you are expecting me to say that the best experience I had at Loyola was my time spent on the Green and Grey staff. Well, you are right. I learned a hell of a lot with the paper and I made some real good friends. This is an experience I urge you to try to experience. You can write, do layout, take pictures, whatever. The new editors need you, try to help them, and yourselves.

So much has happened to me in these four years, it is hard to pack out the best. There were the trips to Georgetown, the billy goat and Genesis concerts, the Junior Prom, the skipper classes real newspaper without having the union representative watch what you touch with an eagle eye.

Even more than the technical benefits of being plunged into the world of the Green & Grey, I have made many friends at the paper and made contacts with people in the Loyola College community. Although they may not remember me in the role of reporter, I have spoken to many of Loyola's administrators.

My very first interview as a cub reporter for the Greyhound was have to do with a person and not just a title.

The friends I have at the paper have made it all worthwhile. I have seen it all at the Green & Grey — arguments, exact knife injuries, and plain old exhaustion. But in the end, I have always had great admiration for such a dedicated group of people. I could never put as much time in the paper as so many other, price-worthy people have. The list is long, but they know who they are.

I have great hopes for the future of the student newspaper at Loyola College. Unfortunately, the practical goal of acquiring real newspaper facilities may not be realized in the near future. But the hardworking efforts of those students who put together the 10 to 16 pages that make up the Green & Grey ought to receive some thanks. Even I, as an associate editor, can take no credit for that. I could not dedicate the 25-plus hours some of the senior editors, managing editor and editor-in-chief put in week after week. I salute you and wish the incoming editors of the Green & Grey much success and appreciation. It may seem like a thankless job, but trust me, you'll feel better for it in the end. Newspapers aren't hurting for entry-level employees. Stick with it, and one day, we will make the Green & Grey at Loyola College one of the best student newspapers to have received training from.

with the Rev. Joseph A. Sellinger. Then news editor Paravati wanted me to do a story on Sellinger's re-appointment to the board at Georgetown University. I have used that clip to bind me internships and part-time jobs. I have spoken with almost all of the academic deans as a reporter. I have written stories on Loyola athletics and student activities. I have to laugh when I hear that Loyola's budding communications majors hate to do interviews. I did too, but I soon realized that every interview I deal with procrastination and, more truthfully, lingering hangovers.

The volunteer work, internships, part-time jobs, and extracurricular activities have all fostered my education at Loyola, without them I would have learned nothing. To succeed you can not sit idly and watch the years go by in hope that at graduation some vast unlearned knowledge will awaken you from your slumber.

ENOUGH ALREADY, lack of sunshine must be getting me, sorry.

Anyway I did want to say a few things.

THE WORST ADVICE I EVER GOT: Dr. Cunningham

and Loyola's presumed committee told me not to apply to medical school. In fact, in all their wisdom they suggested that I, who will not even be graduating with a Bachelor in Science, apply to graduate school so I could get my Masters in Science — what confidence. Fortunately, I listened to the best advice I ever got which came from my parents and roommates and applied anyway. This fall, with a little faith, I will be attending medical school.

On that note I would like to thank those people most key in my last four years here. There are so many people to thank and hopefully I will be able to do that in person, but to my brother, Dave, Jenelle, Janet, Judie, Jim, Donna, Trish, Lorena, Pete I use a special thanks for never letting me reach a point of snarl and always understanding that obsessions of body outweigh those of the mind.

P.S. Remember Trish when you're in the White House and Lorena when you're press secretary, I'm going to be the next U.S. Surgeon General.

Good luck to next year's G&G staff. To all those who wish to achieve, despite what others may say, you shall housing selection, people seem to have adjusted to it. Wynnewood got fixed in time, there are more and better events than in my freshman year, the Media Board Proposal was withdrawn, the SGA was recognized, the handling of parties and discipline seem better than in the "McAuley Riot" days, and other good things have developed. I guess Loyola is getting more practical at being a regional residential college. Plus, from my vintage point, the important campus institutions of the student newspaper and other media are rapidly improving.

The last revelation I will discuss is another insight from my brother, Gary, who told me over Spring Break that I had become a liberal. Although I responded that I was still on the conservative side, I was somewhat proud of the fact that I've become more open to new ideas.

So, I say thanks to Loyola College for my experience, and to all of my friends and teachers, and what the heck, to anyone who smiled at me or said "Hi." Particular thanks go to the people who worked so hard to make the school what it is, especially Tom Paravati, the strength by which his dedication should be measured. Special thanks also to my successors in the business department, who give me confidence that my work will not go wasted and insurance that I'm not completely crazy for doing this job. Finally, I express deepest gratitude to my seventh floor family, who have made me feel loved.

that the editors continue because they truly care about Loyola, its publications, and I because they feel personally satisfied with the accomplishment of every issue.

I've enjoyed my years at Loyola immensely. Graduation may sound exciting to some, but to me it is the culmination of many years of hard work. May 22 can definitely take its time getting here. When else in life can you live with your best friends, with only small responsibilities, create your own working hours, and get a three month vacation?

Thanks to everyone in the paper who has helped me this year. John Paravati — thanks for your creative cartoons — they always broke up the bartedium. Mark Ghosh — thanks for being, even more laid back than I was, your paravailing maniac. Nicky — thanks for typing. Amy — thanks for shooting my cartoons, at the last minute. Tim P. — (the big guy) thanks for never really fixing me, and always throwing in your keen editorial advice at the worst of times. Oh Trish — thanks for getting me involved in all of this fun in the first place, kindly. And to next year's Op/Ed editor Michelle Trice, good luck! Farewell Green & Grey!

waiting for our copy. Mark, good luck in medical school and you'll always be one of my favorite Dead Heads. And to Hovik T. First, you crazy Armenian, if you play your cards right, I'll let you be my children's pediatrician and my husband's fashion coordinator when you grow up. Say hi to Gelsik, and be careful driving, you are a menace on the road! I would like to especially thank Andrew T. Cognie for running through with the goods every time. And to Leanne Rash, although you weren't here this semester, I would like to thank you for your help. To Mark Gloth, you paravailing maniac, I'll never forget the vacation in — — — To the mysterious Editor-in-Chief, your sense of humor was greatly appreciated. And last but not least important, in my predecessor, the Business Editor who has been forgotten, Mr. Sean Sands, thank you for your guidance and guidance.

(though I really don't advise that) and the many, many parties. At those parties I gained experience in Elvis and Frank Sinatra impersonation. There was Satchmo on my microwave, Duck, Tim and Ray on my country top and Betty at the stereo. (A warning to future students: DO NOT bring a credit card, of ANY TYPE, to college! Believe me, I speak from experience.)

In conclusion, I would like to thank the following people, in no particular order. Andy, John, Steve, Matt, Brian, Trish, Tim, Clark, Sean, Betty, Nura, Sarah, Kathy, Tere, Elena, Allana, K.K., the Beast, Lally, Michelle, Jean, D., Cheryl, Ho, Trina, Debbie, Mike, Rosanna, Kase, Tara, Mary, Kendyle, Annmarie, Celeste, Adrienne, S., Wanda, Mark (sings), Trish, Bill, Tim, Duck, Muck, Ray, ME, Christy, John, Donna, Dony, Dave, Jack, Brian, Chris and last, but not least, Ken and Ingrid.

If I forgot to mention anyone, I'm sorry. I'd tell you what I'm doing after graduation, but all I know is, is that I'll be living in Federal Hill, hopefully with a job and hopefully, very happy.

In one week our Senior Week begins, and I'll probably be crawling on my hands and knees back to McAuley thanking God that I DID NOT die that night, on Butler Hill, four years ago!

Good luck to Stacy and the Green and Grey, good luck to Bill and the new SGA and finally, thanks to Moin and Dad for making this all possible.

Once every four years, there comes a time when athletes of all...oh that's the Olympics, I'm sorry. What I'm supposed to write? My acceptance speech? Oh yeah. Once again, this column failed to win a single, solitary award and needless to say I could care less! But if I had won, I thought you might like to hear my speech anyway. So here it goes.

I have a lot of people I want to thank so please, bear with me. Thanks.

First I'd like to thank my major, communications, for providing me with few exams and lots of opportunity for drunken fun.

I'd like to thank the Loyola College Bookstore for their selling me $280 worth of books and having the kindness to buy a select few back for a buck-five.

Thanks to Erin and Suzanne for their "Sunday" pasta meals and providing a drunken detox pad to crash. Oh, thanks Joanne for the rugburn on the forehead.

Thanks to Rob for constantly reminding me on my impending good health.

Thanks to Greg, alias "The Pig," for reminding me to have some "taste in women" and to stay away from girls with peculiar nicknames.

Thanks to Andy for being a senior R.A. whose only concern is if IT is in a cup.

To Loyola soccer, Rugby and lacrosse for winning.

To the Orioles for losing, all of April, in order to conceal Loyola's baseball miseries.

To my girlfriend Suzanne to whom I'll thank in private all summer long.

To Nancy (heh, heh, heh!), for being the class of '91's first Wayfarer fan and she didn't even know it. Maybe still doesn't?

To Beth, by way of Jake the Snake, thanks for the free Gator beer. And you're welcome for the rides home.

To Jeff and Jerry, who allowed Hoover to be a keg party excuse nearly every spring weekend.

To Shawn T., the crazy canuck, for driving here, there and everywhere one way, crazy! He may be the first deported by the MVA.

To Mike Morrison who was a human highlight clip during a disappointing Greyhound basketball season.

Thanks to Tom P. for allowing pseudos and finally getting out of Loyola.

Thanks to Terrence T. for providing us with some much needed SAGA meals as well as a few awesome songs from the Hardline.

To Fly, Raj and Rob for waking up and moving to the best part of campus, McAuley.

To Joey, Jay, Spike and Steve-O, thanks for the connections and your Perdue over stuffer parties. To hell with fines, right guys?

Thanks mom for getting me through another crucial school year with a low, low prime interest rate.

To God for allowing me to turn 21 in the NICK of time.

To Steve for his 12 hour library shifts which makes me appreciate being a communications major.

To Dirt for sucking it up Dude!

To Ed, my Ocean City bud. Thanks for reminding me to say "What the fuckus ozech!"

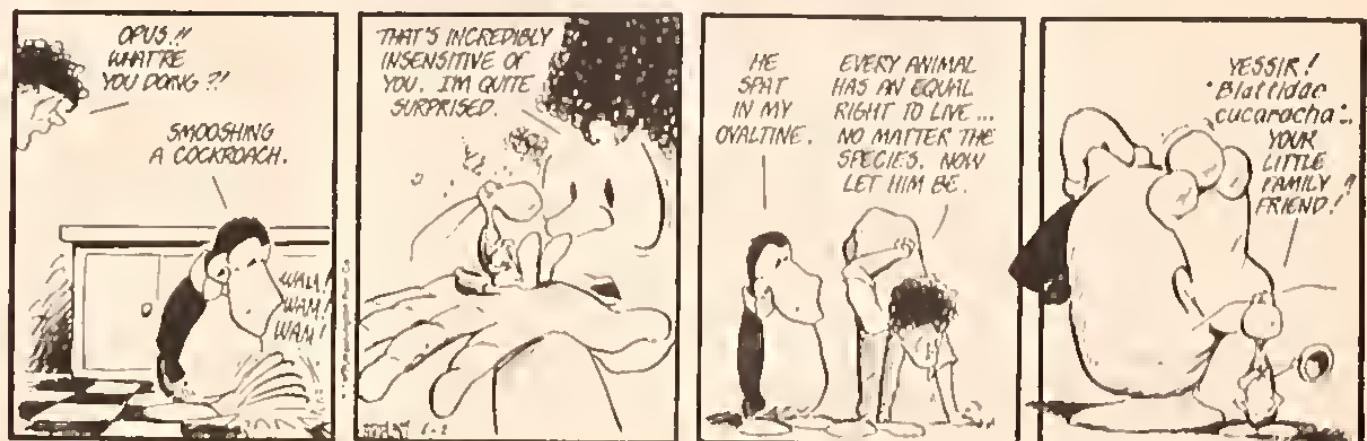

A special thanks to Nick, my Economics/philosophy pizano and wandering minstrel whose Two Sense enlightened the world and wasted space. Three rounds down, only one left to go, I hope.

Thanks to all you who have read this column for some reason or another. Suit yourself, but I think you're wasting your time.

Finally, thanks to May 12 for arriving before I went stir-crazy, and in the words of the almighty Martha and the Vandellas, combined with Jimmy Buffet:

"Summers here and the time is right to get drunk and..." I think ya know the rest. See ya next year, editor willing. BYE!

Sunday Cannons Explodes with Ax, Brick, and Broom

by Michael Yochel

Reported with the permission of the City Paper and special thanks to Michael Yochel

Mark Lane is simultaneously weird and amazing. For three straight years his band — first as The Rockheads, then as Sunday Cannons — has trudged to the annual Bradenton convention at the Meadowlands Hilton in Secaucus, N.J., to compete in a crowded batch of the Beatles cover bands and share space with other Bradenton bands. Back in 1986, The Silver Rockheads finished fourth, playing "Baby in Black," "You Can't Do That" and "She Said, She Said." One year later, with a name change to Sunday Cannons and a complete personnel change, Lane's band clawed its way to the runner-up spot with covers of "Wait" and "Norwegian Wood," finishing behind slavish Bradentonians Juniper's Farm Then, last month, Sunday Cannons slipped to Secaucus for a third consecutive year, this time armed with what Lane terms "revolutionary" covers of "I Me Mine" and "Norwegian Wood" and, in the event of an encore opportunity, a whacked-out rendition of "Lady Madonna." Says Sunday Cannons' drummer Matt Maschal, pointing at band point men Lane and Ed Neenan: "When we first did the songs that way, they were convinced that we'd get booted." Far from it. Fab Four fatalities loved Sunday Cannons' unorthodox versions. Unfortunately, they loved Two of Us' traditional take on "I Want You (She's So Heavy)" — "complete with the white noise effects on synthesizer at the end," according to Neenan — even more. "Well," adds Neenan, "at least we sold 10 copies of our own tape that day."

Sunday Cannons' "own tape," the 10-song Ax, Brick, and Broom, is some kind of okay, a cover mix of subtle psychedelia, folk-rock and unadulterated rock-pop that rebounds off some barriers without shattering them. Released the first week of March, Ax, Brick, and Broom reflects guitars/vocals Lane and Neenan's individual and joint songwriting styles, like, uh, the separate-but-equal approach of Lennon and McCartney. Not that they sound like The Beatles. They don't. The harmonies are there and so are the hooks, but the six songs, despite being marred by a clinically muffled sound, exude a certain cohesiveness. Lane and Neenan clearly understand when to come together and when to steer clear of each other.

Formed last Spring out of the remnants of several different bands, Sunday Cannons — Neenan, Lane, drummer Matt Maschal and bassist Joe Kroschinski — have since reached the point where, according to Neenan, "we finally feel comfortable with each other." That's no great surprise, really, since Lane, Neenan and Maschal played together in half-once-half-off covers band The Click from late '87 to mid-'88. When that band folded, the three scattered Lane to the cool, covers-rich Rockheads, Neenan to the somewhat neo-psychadelic Clever Lunes (which evolved into Fiction Bridges), Maschal to the rooky Richard Taylor & The Ravens. However, when Fiction Bridges collapsed after releasing a four-song indie mini-alp, Neenan called Lane and Maschal, indicating interest in reforming as an all-originals band. They said "okay," and after going through a couple temporary bands, the two corralled Kroschinski last Fall.

Since then, they've sharpened their live sound playing on the Bal-Wash club circuit, building a devoted coterie of fans, as well as opening shows for The Bo-Deans, The Connells and Vigil; Mike and Ed even pulled an Edmunds and Lowe, seceding from the band for one night to do an acoustic set as opening act for the Grapes of Wrath. And, yeah, Sunday Cannons still covers "Norwegian Wood," although almost all of the band's live set consists of Lane and Neenan songs, including the six which show up on Ax, Brick and Broom. (Incidentally, the title is a direct quote from Lane's father, Florian, who, when he saw the band's makeshift mike stand—a broom stuck through an upside-down milk crate that had been propped up with a brick and hatchet—during a band practice, said, "Florian, where this, ax, brick and broom?")

Keyed to Lane and Neenan's rippling, chiming guitars, a strummy acoustic guitar melody line and Kroschinski's anxious, thumpy bass, "Wake Up Tomorrow" is more imagistic than concrete, alluding to inner turmoil and hope for the future. Aurally, it's both stirring and accessible, with Lane playing a compelling, restrained, Edge-like lead surprised by the shirts and long underwear that hang waiting to dry up in the sun.

Rain will run through May 22 with performances Tuesday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m.; Wednesday and Saturday matinees at 2:00 p.m.; and Sunday matinees at 3:00 p.m. Tickets are available in person at the Mechanic Theatre Box Office or by calling TeleCharge at (301) 625-1400.

during the break, and Neenan and Lane's thin-side-of-trippy guitar lines intertwine during a long instrumental outro. Describing his song and Sunday Cannons' lyrical attitude in general, Lane says, "I guess we're saying depend on yourself. Don't close off any avenues until they've been explored. But, really, we're not telling anyone how to live."

That sentiment also bleeds through Lane's clangorous, whipped-up "Swim-mang" ("It's a big, big world/Some people see no further than their feet") and his ambitious "Till I Looked Over, Over," which, like the rest of the cassette, poses more questions than it answers. Although "Till I Looked Over, Over" ranges all over Robinson's barn, bouncing between high-pitched psychedelia and sighing pop and climaxing with a punchy, machine-gun passage before drifting off into a druggy guitar interlude and finally drifting back in to end with feisty raga-rock guitars, it somehow emerges a coherent, remarkable whole.

Just as good is Neenan's edgy, atmospheric "Happy Pie," which makes a great case for flying solo in a world of smiley-faced, loving couples: "I'm sleeping with myself tonight/Cause loneliness is just as nice." And his "Ring Around The Roses" careers along at breakneck pace with rock'em, sock'em guitars, Maschal's perpetually pounding drums and some nice Ed and Mike harmonies on the chorus.

Neenan's best song here, however, is "All Over You," a wallow in contemporary angst which shifts gears a couple of times, including a minor-key mood swing that's akin to Simon and Garfunkel in a jazzy psychedelic lollipop shop. It builds gradually on whiny guitars, then briefly explodes on the first line of the chorus. Lyrically, it calls attention to the fact that, despite the fact that we live in the info age, people still have a difficult time distinguishing between fact and fiction ("Sunday canons fire white confetti all over you").

In truth, there isn't a weak song among the six, although the sound quality is more state-of-the-basement than state-of-the-art, which would be okay if Sunday Cannons was a garage band, but it isn't. So far, the band has sold about half of its original batch of 150 cassettes — some at gigs, some at with-it, area record stores. And if all goes according to plan, the band will release another six-song ep — this time on vinyl — early next year, which will likely include a re-recorded version of "Peter Pan Days," the Sunday Cannons' song which popped up on last Fall's Essential Attitudes, Vol. 2 (Warner Bros. compilation album).

Lorraine Hansberry's A Raisin in the Sun opened last Wednesday at the Morris Mechanic Theatre and it's a knockout. The unabridged version celebrates the play's 25th anniversary and Hansberry's script remains lyrical and poignant under the direction of Harold Scott. The cast, headed by Luther Rolle, is dynamic and Thomas Cianella's set, clean and evocative. I was awed.

"Raisin" tells the story of the Youngers, a three-generation black family living in a skim apartment of Chicago in the early 1950's. The head of the family, Leda Younger (Rolle), dreams of making a better life for her daughter Beneatha, a college student, and her son, Walter Lee, a chauffeur whose wife and son also live in the apartment.

Esther Rolle surprised me. Rolle is better known to audiences as Mama from the television show "Good Times" and I expected Rolle to give Leda a reading like that of the "Mama" character. Both parts seem similar: they are emotionally strong black matriarchs struggling to raise good children in bad settings. However, Rolle polishes Leda with a rich Southern drawl and an emotional restraint that is necessary to establish the character's authority.

The range of Raisin is crammed full of humor and anger alike, and can easily become a stared shooting match if misinterpreted. However, under Howard Scott's inspired direction, the show remains energetic and well-paced until its bittersweet, emotion-packed end.

Kim Yancey brings a comfortable authority to the role of Beneatha. Yancey's interpretation evens up the past that Beneatha has absorbed: the future she is awaiting to and the present that she is frustrated with. Through Yancey, we know where Beneatha has been, and where she undoubtedly is going, despite her sometimes assumptionistic nature. It's refreshing to see a young actress so in tune to her character.

Anger is the main motivation behind Robert Gorset's Walter Lee who dreams of quitting his chafing job and opening a liquor store. A dead dead in Hansberry's script and Gorset creates his character on the aspect of Walter Lee's character. Through Gorset's reading, Walter Lee comes across as slightly schizophrenic screaming and swearing one moment and quiet and passive the next. But, this works. Walter Lee — although a full-grown man — has the emotional stability of a child.

Sandra DePois is steady, assured and confident as Ruth, Walter Lee's wife, and Leda Younger's daughter-in-law. We sympathize with Ruth's desire to

Galleries, Galleries

Galleries, they're everywhere now. Loyola has a gallery as do most area colleges and universities, and best of all — they're free. As that bank account runs dry and the fate of finals loom overhead, why not take a break and grab a cup of culture and entertainment all for free?

Loyola College Gallery is currently showing Recent Oil Paintings by Robert Seiffert. The gallery is open Mon.-Fri. 11 am to 4 pm and Sunday 1-5.

Goucher College's Rosenberg Gallery presents hand painted photographs by Peggy Fox and pastels and oils by Susan Waters-Eller. The gallery is open 9 am-5pm weekdays.

The College of Notre Dame features Pat Ward Williams: Photographic Installations through May 13. Open 9 am-5pm in the Gormley Gallery.

Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine presents Watercolor Society Exhibit. Open daily except Sundays.

Pep Band Makes Big Strides to Make Loyola Noisier

by Paul Cygnarowicz
Sports Staff Writer

What cannot be put into words can sometimes more adequately be said with laughter. This describes the mood of the Loyola Pep Band which has come to the end of a cycle. Seniors Brad Bell, George Congrove, John Kestler, and Mary Sauble will graduate. These four are the first people to play an entire four years in the pep band.

The band was initially formed in 1984 to perform at all home basketball games. Mary Sauble recalls, "We've grown a lot. Back then, no one would have thought to play for soccer or lacrosse games." As those two sports became more successful, the band was encouraged to perform more often.

Band highlights of the last four years include the band's first halftime show in December of 1986 and road trips to Farleigh Dickinson the last two years. The Band has performed at three of the last four ECAC Metro tournaments — at Reitz Arena, Robert Morris, and this year at L.I.U. Band members enjoy the opportunity to travel with the team. Trips make up the most memorable part of the band's year. Brad Bell, trumpet player and driver, laughs, "What will I remember most?" — trying to follow Mark Broderick (band moderator) through every light in New York City.

Bell laments that he never realized one ambition — to be thrown out of a game.

Band leader John Kestler thinks the 1988 band moved another step in the right direction. He says, "It was a good year. We did more roadtrips and played new things. Also, we received more positive comments even though we thought our instrumentation wasn't good." The band's players come from a variety of musical backgrounds. These include symphonic bands, marching bands and jazz ensembles. Most of the music is scored for big marching bands, so the band gets by with the best interpretation they can.

For the future group to succeed, Kestler believes the band will need more rehearsal time and sacrifices. "People need to know it's rewarding. The fun and games come out of a little sacrifice and hard work," he says. Musical director Ken Stastny comments, "In the future we'd like to get pep band as a 1 credit class. This would help attendance and organization. We could become Loyola's performance group."

Students with musical experience are encouraged to join by contacting moderator Mark Broderick or Paul Cygnarowicz. With continued support from the campus community, the returning band will remain a viable contributor to Loyola athletics.

banquet. Anne McCloskey, banquet organizer, said, "I'm particularly pleased we acknowledged all student athletes."

On each of the 14 varsity teams, an MVP (most valuable player) was recognized at the banquet. These students are: Linda McCall, Cathy Grady, Paul Ayd, Marcia Bick, Paul Ryan, Stan Kozioł, Corinne Kelly, Tom McClelland, Dan Gawronski, Karen Paterakis, Noreen McGin, Thomas Coogan, Mike Morrison, and Lorrie Schenning all for their respective sports.

In addition to the MVP awards there were several other special awards. The Magrigan Award for intramurals was awarded to Stacey Beckwith and Gina Aszela. Corinne Kelly of the women's tennis team received the Bill Goodman Award for the unsung hero. The Student Service Award went to Rob Apgar, Janine Kornanik (field hockey and lacrosse) and Tim McClelland (lacrosse) were awarded the ROTC Leadership Award. The first Greyhound Club Scholarship award went to winner Nancie Andrews. The ECAC (Eastern College Athletic Conference) Medal of Merit went to Catherine Hunt (field hockey, lacrosse) and Jeff Nattans (soccer, basketball).

Golf Has No Problems in ECAC Tourney

by Kevin Wells

For the third year in the tournament's four year history the Loyola College golf team won the ECAC Golf Championship at the Seneca Valley Country Club in Pennsylvania. Loyola found themselves five strokes behind the leader

Farleigh Dickinson after the first day of the 36 hole championship. 355 to 350, and only one shot ahead of Robert Morris at 356. The conditions were tough the first day, but we are definitely capable of playing better than this, said Dr. Ventura following the first day.

The second day proved to be better for the Greyhounds, who improved their first day total by 32 shots firing a 323 for a tournament total of 678. Loyola's captain Jim Dunn shot 44-35 for a 79 to lead the team to the championship. "We had won this tournament in my Freshman and Sophomore year, and even though four out of five starters are gone from last year, I knew we had the talent to win it," said Dunn. Sophomore Dan Gawronski also fired a 79 after struggling through the wind on day one. Ron Galeski shot an 81, while Russ Smith had an 84 for a two day total of 168. The team made up twelve shots on FDU who finished in second with a two day total of 685, while Robert Morris slipped into a tie for third

UVA Women Laxer's Take Care of Loyola

by Rob Zink
Assistant Sports Editor

Despite an extremely well-played, competitive first half, which ended with a score of 3-3, the Lady Greyhounds fell short of victory last Tuesday as they lost the battle against the University of Virginia 10-3.

Although Loyola led UVA in draw control 11-4, the team somehow managed to lose possession on their game plan.

During the first half, the 'Hounds put up a good fight. The half consistently remained neck and neck, finally ending in a tie score at finish. All three of Loyola's goals were scored during the first half, the initial goal by junior Beth Begos, the next two by sophomore Karen Ravn Begos' goal was a shovel shot from the right side which fired past UVA's goalie at knee height. Ravn's first goal came from the left side of the cage as she fired a backhand shovel shot which got past the goalie. In her second goal of the game, Ravn received a short pass at the top of the fan from Joy Bogusky, and using the defender as a screen, she fired a side-armed bouncer shot which caught the goalie by surprise.

The second half, however, was a whole different game for Loyola. UVA came out strong, scoring three goals within the first eight minutes. As the gap began to widen, the Lady 'Hounds became quickly discouraged. "We played tough during the first half," said Ravn. "But we lost confidence during the second half as soon as UVA began scoring goals one after the other. The team, however, is now looking forward to the Maryland game on Tuesday. This will be a chance to really prove our ability." Throughout the game, Loyola had 21 shots on goal, while UVA had 27. Sophomore goalie Sue Heeter had a total of 15 saves, as compared to UVA's 12 saves.

Currently, Loyola has an overall record of 8-10. Top scorers of the season are Karen Ravn and Mary Hart.

Rugby Wins JIT Tournament Over St. Joseph's

by Tom Malone
Sports Staff Writer

Last Saturday, Loyola Men's Rugby Club successfully defended the 7th annual Jesuit Invitational Tournament, or the JIT as it's commonly called. This was an especially gratifying win for the rugers who had just come off a tough loss against ERU champion Dartmouth.

The first game of the day saw JIT newcomer Georgetown matched against St. Joseph's from Philly. The hawks from St. Joe's had little trouble handling a much weaker Georgetown team — the final score was 20-6.

The next game turned out to be the game of the day. Loyola squared off against Holy Cross from Massachusetts, who always fields a tough team. Loyola came out flat and although taking the early lead 4-0, Holy Cross evened it up and took the lead by the half. A rallying half-time pep talk by Coach Flanagan coupled with their usual pride and determination saw a much different Loyola team take the field.

Swift running by backs Mike Hart, Chris Carroll and Mark Fecho along with Steve Walsh's awesome kicking and a powerful scrum led Loyola to a close 20-16 victory. Tries were scored by Chris Carroll and Andy Powell.

Following the consolation game in which Holy Cross soundly defeated Georgetown, Loyola met St. Joseph's for a rematch of last year's final. This year was no different. Loyola dominated every phase of the game from the opening whistle. Loyola's scrum pushed the St. Joe pack all over the field including a try scrum. The backs had no trouble either. Tries were scored by wing Chris Natale and fly-half Steve Walsh as Loyola won 16-3.

Wing forward Rob Walter was voted tournament MVP due to his sick, ferocious style of play which has maimed many. This is Loyola's 5th win in 7 years (Holy Cross winning the other two).

Devils Take Series in Seventh

by Chris Pika
Sports Staff Writer

LANDOVER — N.H.L. Lineman Kevin Collins may have wished he never got out of bed last Saturday to work the seventh game of the Patrick Division finale between the Washington Capitals and the New Jersey Devils. Collins washed out a possible offside call against the Devils and they scored with 6:11 left in the third period to beat the Caps 3-2 at Capital Centre on Saturday to advance to the Wales Conference final against the Boston Bruins.

Collins' call (or lack thereof) came when the puck had been flipped out of the Caps' defensive zone. A Devils player shot it back into the zone while Jersey's Patrik Sundstrom was still over the blue line. The puck was by the blue line when it hit the Caps' Mike Ridley on his thigh and stayed in the zone. Here's where the offside set kicks. The offside call states "If a player legally carries or passes the puck back into his own defending zone while a player of the opposition is in the zone 'offside' is ignored." The linesman thought Ridley had possession in his own zone. Ridley thought otherwise. "He (Collins) was to be thought I had control of the puck. It bounced off my thigh and I thought it was an offside call."

Jersey's Craig Wolanin picked up the loose puck and smacked a slapshot toward Cap goalie Petr Peeters. The puck deflected off the stick of John MacLean and over Peeters' shoulder for the series-winner.

The controversy over the goal overshadowed a fine comeback attempt by the Caps. The Devils jumped out early at the 14-second mark when Kirk Muller grabbed a deflected puck in front of the net and put it away for a 1-0 lead.

The lead became 2-0 when Claude Lariviere tipped in Bruce Driver's left-front slapshot past Peeters at 12:01 of the first period. The Caps had plenty of chances to come back in the period as they had four power-play chances and they could not convert.

The second period started with the Caps having a two-man advantage for the first 41 seconds. The Caps did not get a shot off on Devil goalie Sean Burke during the advantage and the situation looked bleak for the Caps as a sellout crowd of 18,130 looked on. The Caps had 21:21 when Grant Ledy and shot the puck past a screened Burke at the 15:21 mark. With 6 seconds left in the period, Gary Galley tied the game when he shot the puck end over end in the air over Burke into the net.

Even with the Caps down after the MacLean goal, they still had six minutes to score, but they could not get the equalizer past Burke. The Capitals outshot the Devils 32-26, with Burke stopping 30 of them enroute to his sixth win of the playoffs, making the Devils the Patrick Division champions.

IRIE Beats Ripsters; Meets Foul Balls for Softball Championship

by Rob Zink
Assistant Sports Editor

Last last Thursday night, during the men's softball eighth league championship game, Lee Collins' IRIE won and defeated Tom McGuire's "Ripsters," 13-11. IRIE will now battle Tim Cronin's "Foul Balls," who have an 8-0 record, starting at 6:30 for the divisional championship game tomorrow.

Coming into the game, the Ripsters were the only undefeated team in the league, with a record of 10-0. They had already challenged IRIE earlier in the season and came out on top. "We started out strong — with five runs during the first inning," said Karen Graetz and Greg McNeese. "The gap then began to widen but we had a strong comeback, only to be 2-2."

Collins' team had an 8-2 record coming into the championship game. They started out slow, but then gradually managed a 13-6 lead. "We had a good offensive showing," said Collins. "Both teams had a strong showing with great effort."

In the men's league, the top players has an undefeated record of 8-0. He is Economics professor Charles Scott. The other top players of the league include Jerry Silberstein, Ken Rosik, Mike and Kurt Prieron, and Paul Nasse.

Baseball Ends Season

by Dan Geets
Sports Staff Writer

The Loyola College baseball club ended its season last Wednesday in Gettysburg the same way it began early in March — with a rain out. The team has now compiled a two-season record of 1-20-1. Players remain optimistic despite their failure to reach the win column.

"I think the year was still a learning process for us," said junior third baseman Ed Kowalewski. He also said that "I don't see that we're in over our heads." The primarily junior-built Greyhounds played several close games against top NCAA Division II and III teams, tying Western Maryland while losing several other one-run games.

Coach Jeff King plans to return next year to continue to build the team. He has four new recruits as well as a freshman class that he hopes will produce the same results as this year's class.

Shortstop Joe Hammann, first baseman Joe Peters, and second baseman Bo Vicendese, all freshmen, teamed with Kowalewski to form the infield. King thinks they have the makings of a strong infield for next year.

Hammann led the team in doubles this year with three. Steve Bellone, the only player to hit over .300, also led the team in on-base percentage at .485. Junior Joe Varua led all pitchers with an ERA of 1.0 over nine innings.

The team's increased play over last year has King hoping that they will continue going in that direction. Next season's schedule will have many of the same teams as this year's despite the fact that King feels that "We played in a league (this year) that we're not capable of playing in."

He said, though, that with a little improvement next year the team can get into the win column more often. "Maybe with some more personal we can win some games next year." Only one player, senior pitcher Tim McConas, will graduate this year.

First on King's agenda for next season is the acquisition of a home field. They had a practice field that they received through the city this year at the Medfield Heights Playfield off of Falls Road, but that was taken away midway through the season. The only chance of getting a field that the team can use for free is by going through the city. They are now on a waiting list for next year. King said that a home field would be the "clincher." Also in the plans for next year is an eight-game fall schedule that would consist of many of the same teams on this year's spring schedule.

King hopes that these additions will lead to some wins for the team next year. As King said, and singer Phil Collins would too, "It's gonna get better."

Loyola has Boston Marathon Runners

by Rob Zink
Assistant Sports Editor

On April 18, three members of Loyola College's Military Science staff participated in the famous Boston Marathon.

Sgt. McClymont, Sgt. Offer and Capt. Burrell all successfully finished the 26.2 mile course. The first runner crossed the finish line at 2 hours, 8 minutes. Capt. Burrell finished at 3 hours, 35 minutes, while Sgt. McClymont finished at 3 hours, 45 minutes and Sgt. Offer at 4 hours, 10 minutes.

The three cadres had been training since October. "It was a major feat," said Captain Burrell. "We were physically fit, though. The people along the sidelines during the race were extremely enthusiastic and encouraging — they kept us going."

The Boston Marathon is an annual major event. Some 10,000 people participate each year.

Mike Ruland

by Kerry Marshall
Sports Staff Writer

Junior Mike Ruland has learned from years of practice to use his small size to his advantage. On the lacrosse field, this comes in the form of his ability to change direction quickly, often leaving much larger defenders wondering how he got away. The other team members appreciate these quick moves because it allows Ruland to make one of two choices. He can either pass the ball, again using his exceptional quickness, giving a teammate a scoring opportunity, or he can take the shot himself. Either way, the team has a strong chance of scoring because of these fast cuts.

Ruland does feel, however, that he could look for his teammates more. "I need to concentrate on being aware of the people around me. Sometimes I get impatient and force the ball." This is one aspect of the team's game that Ruland believes needs to be concentrated on if they expect to make the playoffs and do well once they make it. "At times we're not mentally ready."

Mike believes that although it is up to the individual members of the team to prepare themselves mentally, the coaching staff has done an excellent job of preparing the Hounds. "strategy-wise" for their opponents and that is one of the many reasons why the team has been able to go this far. Another one of the reasons is the closeness of the team. There is a great deal of comradery between all the team members and everybody is always willing for everyone else.

Team spirit is part of the reason why Mike decided to play lacrosse in many Ivy League schools, but chose Loyola for a combination of reasons including cost and the overall atmosphere of the campus.

UVA No Contest for Greyhounds Once Again

Last Saturday night at Scott Stadium in Charlottesville, Virginia, the Greyhounds picked apart the University of Virginia's defense, collected them bit by bit, folded them up, put them in their pocket, and once again showed them how an upset-minded underdog can put the wraps on a much larger and respected Virginia team.

Loyola went into the game with much less on the line than Virginia. The Cavaliers needed a victory to remain in the tournament picture and also lost Saturday's upset loss to the Greyhounds to be in the back of their minds. The Greyhounds needed the victory to prove that they could play with some of the best. They can.

In the 13-7 trouncing of UVA, Loyola almost assured themselves of their first ever NCAA Division I tournament bid. At the end of the game, Coach Cottle's only post game words were, "NCAA." He then proceeded to get the Gatorade treatment by his players.

Goalie Tom McClelland was once again outstanding for the Greyhounds. He stopped 20 Cavalier shots and was tested throughout the game. "The excellent goaltending was the key to our win," said Cottle. UVA doubled the Greyhound's shot output, 49-24.

Another amazing effort was given by Rusty Prizbill. He scored seven of his team's 13 goals. I wonder if Hobart is missing him at all.

If you don't recall last year's game at Curley Field, the Greyhounds also spoiled a Cavalier victory, in defeating Virginia in their last regular season game. Unfortunately the Greyhounds went nowhere after the regular season, rightfully so with a loss to lowly UMBC, and a trouncing by UNC. This year the team is playing more like a team and they won't only go to the tournament, but they could possibly host their first game or even get a first round bye.

UVA hates Loyola. They don't understand. They didn't even know what Loyola was three years ago but currently are hassled by Loyola athletics. Last year in soccer, Virginia was in their way to the finals of the NCAA soccer tournament. Whoops! Loyola Greyhounds (pop. 3500, little recognition or respect, and lucky) 1 — UVA (pop. approx. 15,000, number 1 ranking in Division I college soccer, and cocky) 0. Oh well there's always next year.

Whoops!

A repeat. Don't worry about it UVA, you'll get four or five more high school All-American recruits like usual and beat us next year. I mean 0-3 would be entire too shabby.

Considering we are now 4-0 in lacrosse and 0-0 in the first two seasons against Virginia, I think we have some pretty good talent over here. Maybe some luck too. Maybe lucky enough to add UVA to our basketball schedule.... I better stop with that comment; we'll save that contest for the future.

A strange week in sports. UVA was expected to win; they didn't. The Orioles were not expected to win; they did, and the Caps were expected to win, they also of course did not. At least the Bullets are staying loyal to their predictions and losing once again in the first round, fulfilling everyone's expectations of the most mediocre team in the NBA.

Quote of the Week: Mike Pirozzelli commenting on the coaching scene during the Athletic Awards Banquet when Andy Wilson sadly told the audience of his graduation not even having his parents in the stands during his years at Loyola. "In the four years that I have been at Loyola my parents have been to almost all of my games but they still haven't seen me play," said Pirozzelli.
